

APPEA members who pay no income tax

Briefing note

Mark Ogge

May 2022

SUMMARY

Five of Australian Petroleum Production & Exploration Association's (APPEA) most prominent member companies have paid no income tax for at least the past seven years despite combined income from their Australian operations of $138 billion.

A sixth company, Santos, paid just $6 million on $28.9 billion of income, and paid no income tax from 2015 to 2018 and in 2020.

None of the companies that own and operate Queensland's coal seam gas (CSG) liquefied natural gas (LNG) projects have paid any income tax on income earned on those projects to date.

Overall, the oil and gas industry in Australia paid $1.7 billion of income tax in 2018/19 (the most recent year for which data is available) on $110 billion of income (approx. 1.5 per cent).¹

Industry claims including by APPEA that gas projects would be contributing billions of dollars in federal taxes have not eventuated.

DATA

The Australia Institute has used corporate tax transparency data published by the Australian Taxation office (ATO). A summary of the annual income and income tax paid by those companies for the period the ATO has published this data is shown in Tables 1 and 2 below.

The lack of income tax paid contrasts with claims made by the industry when these companies were seeking approval for their projects

APPEA estimates of Commonwealth income tax revenue from Queensland coal seam gas LNG

In 2012 APPEA commissioned and published a report on the 'economic significance' of Coal Seam Gas (CSG) development in Queensland estimating that $85 billion in Commonwealth Government income taxes would be paid over the life of the projects. The report includes a breakdown of these taxes by year.²

However, except for $3 million paid by Santos in 2018, none of the companies involved in Queensland CSG LNG projects have paid income tax since LNG export began in 2015.³ Onshore gas projects in Australia are not subject to the other significant potential tax on oil and gas companies, the Petroleum Resource Rent Tax (PRRT).

There are three CSG LNG export projects in Queensland:

1. Australia Pacific LNG (APLNG) a joint venture between Origin (37.5 per cent), ConocoPhillips (37.5 per cent) and Sinopec (25 per cent).⁴
2. Gladstone LNG a joint venture between Santos (30 per cent), Petronas (27.5 per cent), Total (27.5 per cent) and Kogas (15 per cent).⁵
3. Queensland Gas Company (QGC) owned by Shell.⁶

Add to that the Arrow Energy project which produces CSG for the domestic market and for export and is owned by Shell and PetroChina (a subsidiary of CNPC).⁷

APLNG and Arrow are presented as single entities in the ATO data, and neither have paid any income tax since 2014 when the reporting began. Santos has paid no income tax since the commencement of GLNG in 2015 except for 2018 when it paid $3 million. That $3 million is not necessarily on income from GLNG, as Santos has several major oil and gas projects in Australia. Santos's joint venture partners in GLNG, Petronas, Total and Kogas paid no income tax in the years included in the ATO data. Shell also has many oil, gas and petroleum interests in Australia, and the ATO data does not disaggregate the tax paid for their QGC project. However, Shell have paid no income tax since it purchased QGC from BG Group in 2016. Prior to that, BG Group paid no income tax on the project.

Chevron

In 2015 Chevron published a report commissioned from ACIL Allen that claimed its Gorgon and Wheatstone projects would contribute $110 billion to state and federal government revenue between 2009 and 2040. A chart, shown in Figure 2 below, shows Chevron’s “direct taxation and royalty estimates” by tax, broken down into federal and state taxes. The vast bulk of the revenue is to the federal government. The Gorgon and Wheatstone projects do not pay royalties to the federal government, and little if any to the Western Australian Government.¹¹

The two major taxes that the project proponents could pay are income tax and PRRT. Chevron has paid neither during the period reported by the ATO. The claims made in the ACIL Allen paper are compared to the actual income and resource rent tax paid by Chevron in Table 4 below

Shell

In 2013 Shell claimed that its Prelude floating LNG project would pay $12 billion in taxes over the life of the project.¹⁴ Shell has since acknowledged it will never pay PRRT¹⁵ and as shown in Table 1 above, has paid no income tax since 2015.
